Crown Hill Confederate Plot, within the confines of the privately owned Crown Hill Cemetery in Indianapolis, Indiana, is the final resting place for more than 1,600 Confederate prisoners of war. The mass grave is marked with a granite obelisk. The names of those believed to be buried there are listed on ten bronze plaques mounted on granite blocks in front of the monument.

Early in the Civil War, Camp Morton, located just north of Indianapolis served as an important recruitment and training center for the Union Army. The camp later became a major detention facility after the Union victory at Fort Donelson, Tennessee, in February 1862, when the Union sent thousands of captured Confederates north as prisoners of war. From 1862 to 1865, more than 9,000 prisoners passed through Camp Morton; an estimated 1,700 died from disease and injury, often exacerbated by the poor camp conditions.

The Confederate dead from Camp Morton were first buried in Indianapolis' Greenlawn Cemetery. Initially, volunteers buried Confederate soldiers, as national cemeteries were built only for Union soldiers. Until the turn of the 20th century, Congress made no effort to provide for or identify Confederate burial sites. In 1912, the Federal Government erected a 27-foot tall monument to commemorate the Confederate dead at Greenlawn, as individual graves could not be identified and marked with headstones. In 1928, this monument was relocated to Garfield Park, three miles south of downtown, where it still stands today. In 1933, the remains of the Confederate soldiers were reinterred to a mass grave located in Crown Hill Cemetery and marked by a new six-foot tall granite monument. A plaque dedicates the memorial to the "1,616 Unknown Confederate Soldiers who died at Indianapolis while Prisoners of War." Sixty years later, an effort led by two Indianapolis police officers to identify the remains buried in the mass grave culminated in the dedication of ten markers that list the names of Confederates who died at Camp Morton and are believed to be buried in the Confederate plot.

The plot is located near the center of Crown Hill Cemetery, in Section 32, Lot 285, approximately 1,700 feet northwest of the main gate, and 1,300 feet northeast of the Crown Hill National Cemetery. The plot is marked by a simple, white post-and-chain fence.

SOLDIERS REMEMBERED

City Men on Mission tied to Civil War

By Paul Bird
The Indianapolis News

Two Indianapolis Police Officers will go to Washington, D.C., Jan 28 to try to change one chapter in Civil War history.

The officers want proper marking of a grave in Crown Hill Cemetery that carries only a small stone noting "1,616 unknown Confederate soldier."

A three-story monument- listing every name - is 5 1/2 miles away in Garfield Park.

"We are suggesting either moving the bodies to a larger plot purchased by the federal government and moving the monument to the same location, building a 50 percent smaller version of the existing monument and placing it on the existing plot - or simply moving the existing monument somewhere in Crown Hill," said Detective Stephen Staletovich.

Sens. Richard Lugar and Dan Coats, R- Ind., have agreed to meet with Staletovich and Officer Wayne Sharp to discuss their proposal. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., whose meeting agenda was blocked out for January and February, instructed his office to notify Staletovich and Sharp he will meet with them, too.

Urban expansion separated the dead from their grave marker.

The soldiers died while at Camp Morton, a union prison camp located near the current intersection of 22nd and Talbot streets. They were buried in the old Greenlawn Cemetery, near South and West Streets.

The federal government erected the three-story monument with six bronze plates in 1912.

Greenlawn closed in phases, and the soldiers' bodies were moved to Crown Hill between 1928 and 1933.

The monument then was moved (to) Garfield Park, to make it more visible at the request of the Southern Club of Indianapolis.

"The dignity and honor of those soldiers has been forsaken," Staletovich said. "Every Confederate soldier's name is listed on a huge monument, but it is in Garfield Park."

An accurate list of the Confederates in Crown Hill's office records (?).

Staletovich's family didn't arrive in the United States from Prizren, Serbia, until 1917. His interest is historical accuracy. Sharp's is much the same: He is (the) historian for IPD.

They have conducted the research on their own, and the Sons of Confederate Veterans group will fund their trip to Washington.

When they go, they will carry letters of support from national officers of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, United Daughters of Confederacy, Civil War Roundtables, Southern Club of Indianapolis, American Legion posts, church groups and private citizens.

They also have prepared a videotape presentation about the monument.

"We know that the monument was supposed to be reunited with the grave about 1928 and we know a federal law said the monument is supposed to be in the close proximity of the graves," Staletovich said of his research.

It is unknown why the bodies and the monument were not moved together, he said.

"Whatever is decided," he said, "I hope this is the last time these Americans are disturbed."

SOLEMN TRIBUTE PAID AT CROWN HILL AS CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS ARE REBURIED

*Source: Indianapolis Star, 10/28/1931, p. 12
Special thanks to Wayne Sharp who submitted the following article*

The North and South joined in solemn tribute yesterday afternoon while 1,616 Confederate soldiers who died on Indiana soil during the civil war were buried in Crown Hill Cemetery with military honors.

The dead had been removed from Greenlawn Cemetery, which surrendered to an invasion of the industrial district, to one of the most beautiful sections near the main gate of Crown Hill Cemetery.

The showers of the afternoon stopped temporarily when the military escort from Fort Benjamin Harrison formed at the entrance of the cemetery for the march to the graves of the fallen warriors.

Led by the Fort Harrison band and a platoon of infantrymen, a hearse bearing a coffin containing the body of a confederate soldier, draped with the stars and bars of the South, moved toward the plot of ground on a wind swept, rain soaked knoll where the bodies of his companions in conflict reposed.

Beat Muffled Martial.

A cortege composed of the Southern Club of Indianapolis, representatives of the City of Indianapolis, Veterans of Foreign Wars and the United States Army followed the hearse as the drums of the bandsmen beat a muffled martial step.

As the cortege halted at the graves and the band began a funeral hymn, raindrops drummed a repetitious requiem: "Give them eternal rest, O Lord."

While the military guard stood at attention, the body of the last Confederate Soldier was removed from the hearse and taken to the grave by Arthur R. Dewey, Dr. Charles Henry of Chattanooga, Tenn., B. H. Caughran, Kennedy Reese, Horace J. Gault and Brodehurst Elsey, pallbearers representing the Southern Club.

Prayer was offered by Maj. Samuel J. Miller, Chaplain of Fort Harrison, and Arthur G. Gresham of the Veterans of Foreign Wars placed on the bier a laurel magnolia wreath symbolic of the South.

"We of the Veterans of Foreign Wars are here today, as we think that it is right and just that we should pay this last tribute to our comrades who have gone beyond," Mr. Gresham said. "As this laurel magnolia is symbolic of the south, so also it is symbolic of their faith and our faith in this our United States."

Kenna Delivers Funeral Sermon.

"The skies are overcast and the heavens seem to be weeping as we pause to pay tribute to noble, brave soldiers who fought and lost gloriously," the Rev. Alpha H. Kenna, pastor of the Roberts Park M. E. Church, a native of the South said in the funeral sermon. "We today pledge to them who died on both sides and to our comrades who sleep in Flanders fields that we will be true to the principles and ideals for which they fought and died. We will preserve them in times of peace and die for them in times of war."

As more than one hundred persons stood in the driving rain with bared heads, the military guard fired a salute and a bugler sounded taps.
